

The Sunday Star.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

INVISIBLE COLOR BOOK for Boys & Girls

June 11, 1922

PATENTED JULY 12 1921

PIONEER DAYS

INDIANS! INDIANS! in the minds of boys, riding their ponies at top speed to the lonely stretch of the trail between the corner and middle of the block on our street, where they wait for the old stage coach, to rob it of the mail and express money. "Hi! Ya! Hi! Ya!" they yell, and the helpless driver must shoot and shoot until all the bullets are gone from his trusty wooden gun. His careful aim and loud BANG! BANG! does not save him, but many of their number "bite the dust" before he surrenders. In play, the poor driver is wounded and taken captive. The bad Indians have to ride hard to escape with their prize. With a brush and plain water, paint carefully between the lines of the picture and color each object.

EDITOR'S NOTE—Look through the book and read the stories under each picture before painting or making the cut-out. Rinse the brush often to prevent the colors running together

Copyright, 1922, World Color Printing Co., St. Louis, Mo.